They'll scot for home and settle down,
To jackstraws with the baby.

THE crop outlook is thus given by the Louisville Commercial:

The grain markets are weaker, as is usually the case when stocks are booming. The fact of it is, the crops in this country were never more promising than now, and then the prospect for a heavy fall and winter business is bettering daily. The only crop the most persistent bears can point to as in the least discouraging is corn and the shortage in the sections where the crop was injured by the heavy rains is likely to be more than overcome by the heavy production of the more favored districts.

Out With Our Indiana Cousins.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., July 10, 1882.

Editor Bulletin: The merited attractions of this metropolis excel all accounts given. To see is to believe and people will not believe until they see.

Then come and see Indianapolis as it is Our cousin's home is our subject. Fred Rand formerly lived in Owingsville, Bath county, Ky., and migrated to Indianapolis in 1855, the year we were admitted to the bar in Maysville, when Judge Duvall was presiding. Judge Rand soon rose in the legal profession and is Judge of the Supreme Court. His courtesies to us while in this city were continued during our stay. The first call we made was on Oscar Hord, Ex-Attorney General of Indiana, a son of the late Frank T. Hord, and an associate of Governor Hendricks.

We have from our boyhood felt akin to the Hords, parents and children, living in friendship for the past forty years.

General Hord tendered us every hospitality his eminent means and large facilities offered.

Gov. Hendricks, who drives a splendid team, called to pay his respects. He no doubt had heard we corresponded for the BULLETIN.

The center of attraction and a ted pride of all Indians is the magnificent Court House. It has been our province to visit all the principal cities in this great country, East and West, North and South, including the Canadas and we admit the Indianapolis Court House excels everything constructed by the genius and art of man. Its stupendous dimensions, towering high above all other structures, the blending of the rich marble, wonderful stairways, its spacious courts and marble galleries, strike one as suggestive of oriental splendors.

And now these ambitious hoosiers are erecting a State House to excel the pile of unequalled art. If we live we shall go to see it. Time is up and we must turn our faces homeward. Indiana and Indians have overwhelmed us with their enviable possessions and captured us with the magnificence of their homes as well as by the liberal and unlimited hospitalities extended to MARRIED.

July 18, 1882, at the residence of Rev. Father J. B. Glorieux, Miss MAGGIE SWIFT, of this city, to Mr. JOHN B. LLOYD, of Lexington, Ky.

In Memoriam.

Died in Maysville, Kentucky, to-day the 15th inst., Hal Gray of that city. At my distant home and ere his mortal remains have been consigned to the tomb this sad intelligence has reached me. So swift yet again, and again, has been my fate to be shocked and stunned and plunged in grief by the speediness of these remorseless shafts. They come tempered by no gentleness, have no mercy, strike unflinchingly, fall without warning. The aged, the young, the gay, the unbound in the wilds of happiness and happiest moments, here have pause. The light of memories is present, it contrasts the dead with impartial and sacred truth, it but portrays the life that was, its judgment is just its decision, final. I came within the circle of his home and immediate surroundings in the sphere of his home and his associations and wherever known in every feature and outline of his gentle mien and manner to attest that he never left a string in a human heart save when he ceased to live.
